Self images of professionals in the co-operation between youth welfare services and school

Besides systematic knowledge and professional empiric knowledge normative ideas form a main part of professional interpretation patterns. Possibilities and limits, which professionals attribute their own guild influence perception and realization of their own mission of action on a large scale (e.g. Münch 2009, 74).

In the co-operation between youth welfare services and school different professions meet. Despite the same aim group they have their own specific perception of realizing the educational mission. Due to that the language of professionals in this field is formed by the same terms but definitions of these terms are partly even opposing each other.

Different self images of school and youth welfare professionals are based on this experience (Luthe 2009, 72). But co-operation can only be successful once an interdisciplinary mode of professional dealing with different self images exists (Kohlmeyer 2007, 150; Müller 2007, 209). Guidelines from welfare state model discussions to rephrasing political control strategies on the municipal level influence this mode.

Through professional support during the construction of a social area oriented educational landscape in a German community I want to show which self images exist, how they act, which (local) political control strategies have an effect and how professionals shape the co-operation between youth welfare and school under these circumstances (Lohre 2007, 43).
